

CANTERBURY Mayor Brian Robson joined Cr Linda Eisler and school students at the unveiling of the 2011 Community Art Project, initiated by Canterbury Hurlstone Park Chamber of Commerce to reduce graffiti. Project coordinator Alexander Bailey said the 2011 Community

Art Project recently installed on the Hurlstone Park rail overbridge, was created by students and teachers in school art classes at Canterbury Girls' and Canterbury Boys' high schools, plus Canterbury and Ashbury public schools. "The bridge was chosen as a hub where the community could show art in an organised way and community members would be able to look, appreciate and seek to understand," Mr Bailey said. Almost six years ago, the Chamber established a project to reduce graffiti in the business centre.
